DIPLOMATIC JAPANESE

A Merchant's Method of Appreciating Courtesies Shown His Friends.

Japanese diplomacy was illustrated the other day when a small party of Japanice merchants were visiting the Commercial museums in Philadelphia. One of the attaches, a secretary, had the visitors in charge and was very attentive to the party, taking pains to fully explain everything of interest in the museums, and more particularly the features that most interested the Japanese, says the Philadelphia Record. When the merchants were leaving, their leader, stating that he desired to reciprocate in a small way the courtesies that had been shown his friends, produced a beautiful silk handkerchief, showing a composite design In colors of the American and Japanese fings, which he presented to the museum attache. "It is a little token of the amity that exists between our nations," he remarked. "Japan is on a friendly footing with all the world. I have handkerchiefs with composites of the Japanese flags and flags of all other countries. Wherever we visit we leave some of them as souvenirs. They are small things, but it is such little things done, it means unsafe things made safe and one more worry marked off. If we lo it, it is well done. 55th year, doing concluded, with a smile, "we will be ing between peoples. Perhaps," he concluded, with a smile, "we will be distributing handkereblefs bearing composites of the Russian and Japanese flags in Russia before long."

"When Women Love."

As long as the world goes round there will be conspiracies against goodness and virtue. In the play "When Women Love," written by William W. LaPoint, there is a story of heart interest that commends more than ordinary interest. A young girl weighted with the care of an invalid mother and younger sister, truggles against poverty and privation, is accused of crime, a man made in the same old image persecutes, accuses and in the end finds the old adage is only too true. "The Wages of Sin is Death."
The play is presented by a strong cast, and the entire production is carried including some of the best scenic effects ever shown on the popular priced stage.
